THE BLOUSED BACK TREATMENT OF THIS GRAY CARACUL DAY COAT Illustrates Well the Clothlike Manipulations of Fur Typical of This Season. From Julius Klugman. (New York Times Studios.)

By GRACE WILEY.

ONCE a fur coat gets beyond a certain length, the result is clumsiness, a fact so evident that furriers concentrate on designing shorter wraps immediately the trend toward longer skirts becomes prominent. Side-pointed scarves, tippetts, capelets and boleros were the first expression of this need to break the too-long lines of the silhouette. Now come jackets of varied type and length preparing the eye for the gradual lengthening of the skirt that is bound to occur.
